Real estate investors have used the Section 1031 exchange for decades to trade assets while deferring taxable gains. The Qualified Opportunity Zone program provides real estate investors options to defer taxes and, in some cases, even eliminate taxable profits altogether, which has led real estate investors to inquire: Which is better, a 1031 tax exchange or a qualified opportunity zone real estate investment?

Hear from Greenberg Traurig attorneys and Saltmarsh accounting and financial professionals with valuable marketplace knowledge, actionable strategies, and networking opportunities equipping you to navigate the evolving landscape of this powerful economic tool.
